Greetings! It is a privilege to offer our 2022 Annual Report and serve as the new President & CEO of Frederik Meijer Gardens & Sculpture Park. In the pages ahead, you’ll find a small portion of the many charitable and programmatic endeavors underscoring the values and forethought that make Meijer Gardens a unique institution that serves as a beacon for art, culture, and nature. And you’ll learn that thanks to your support, attendance, membership, volunteering, participation, and donations, we can confidently state our institution is strong, sustainable, and positioned well for seasons to come.

The past several years have been extremely challenging and rewarding for our beloved institution—surviving the choppy waters of a pandemic, opening our new facilities while closing the Welcoming the World: Honoring a Legacy of Love campaign, thanking David Hooker for his generational service, and ushering in a new era of leadership with my recent appointment. Truly, this has been a dynamic time anchored by the very spirit of Fred and Lena Meijer—building a sustainable institution of joy and serving the world by welcoming all people. These are beacons and guiding objectives that empower all of us—their stewards—to support, advocate, and innovate a not-for-profit charity institution for the future.

From artwork to gardens, from facility maintenance to general operations, from community-connecting programs to world-class exhibitions: Our dynamic programs and initiatives demonstrate the generosity of the thousands of families and individuals who call Meijer Gardens their pride and joy. Together with your support, attendance and membership, we create incredible impact—serving a patron base with 27,948 active memberships and 694,799 patrons annually, employing 199 employees, benefiting from hundreds of volunteers and 66,206 volunteer hours, and welcoming over 14 million guests since our founding. Remarkable to say the least—a healthy ecosystem of active participation and an eye for our shared future.

As we turn the page of another year of friendship and support, please know our future is remarkable—not excellent, but remarkable. My early tenure has been infused with the concepts of listening, learning, connecting, visioning, planning and ultimately supporting a fresh affirmation of a contemporary institution prepared to evolve to a state of the remarkable. As we take on this audacious task, we will measure and be accountable. We will be healthy and prudent in our choices. And we will be engaging and transparent with our direction for that remarkable journey. Thank you for your stewardship in empowering this journey ahead.

In closing, my invitation is forefront: Attend a concert, see an exhibition, walk the gardens, stroll the park, listen to the families playing nearby, honor Fred and Lena with a quiet visit of gratefulness, or even look to the East and imagine our future of possibility. And please know that one thing is certain in all that we do at the Frederik Meijer Gardens & Sculpture Park—we are humbled and grateful to you for your friendship and support.

Charles Burke
President & CEO, Frederik Meijer Gardens & Sculpture Park
Sculpture

Fiscal year 2022 was one of artful new beginnings for the Sculpture Department.

The year 2022 was dynamic and fulfilling for the Sculpture Department at Frederik Meijer Gardens & Sculpture Park. The Welcome Center finally opened to the public, with the unveiling of Jaume Plensa’s grand and masterful work Utopia within the Garden Pavilion. There is no other sculptural room quite like this in the world; a room that surrounds visitors in an immersive floor-to-ceiling artwork of white marble reliefs celebrating the unity of all people.

The Sculpture team also welcomed our new Chief Curator, Suzanne Ramljak, who hit the ground running—developing and scheduling sculpture exhibitions for the next several years along with leading the collection initiatives. She was responsible for bringing in Mark Mennin, last year’s ArtPrize winner of Honorable Mention in the 3D category. His installation of carved stone beds, Embedded, provided an engaging experience in the Frey Foundation Plaza, inviting guests to interact with the sensuous sculptures. The renovated indoor Sculpture Galleries made their debut with the exuberant exhibition Yinka Shonibare CBE: Planets in My Head. Following this was the more meditative Double Take: Mel Chin & Elizabeth Turk, featuring two MacArthur fellowship recipients whose work finely complemented one another.

Outdoors saw a major Sculpture Park installation, underwritten by the Jewish Federation of Grand Rapids: Ways to Say Goodbye, by Ariel Schlessinger, serves as a memorial to the Holocaust. The Sculpture team worked closely with the artist to create an intimate, contemplative setting that proved rewarding for all involved.

The team was also excited to reinstall the central sculptural element of Oliviero Rainaldi’s newly formatted The Tribute, in the updated Volunteer Tribute Garden. The original bronze exterior depicting a narrative of volunteer contributions at Meijer Gardens now has a complementary aluminum interior honoring the love of Fred and Lena Meijer and the importance of our natural waterways. These are a few notable highlights of a busy year, as the Sculpture Department continues to provide world-class art experiences that fulfill our broader mission.
Punctuated by several significant horticultural events, among them the reopening of a newly reimagined garden and a prescribed burn that invigorated a diverse natural space, 2022 was a year of change.

The Tassell-Wisner-Bottrall English Perennial Garden reopened July 1, with a modern twist on a classic design. Three years in the making, it’s become the most horticulturally diverse area within our 158 acres. This love letter to English gardeners everywhere springs forth from a plum partnership with internationally renowned landscape architects and horticulturalists, and our own Horticulture and Sculpture teams. Together, we reimagined this beloved garden into a fresh space—honoring the cherished original while inspiring a modern experience that’s distinctively Frederik Meijer Gardens & Sculpture Park.

Tucked between the spruce-topped hills and wooded outcroppings of the Sculpture Park lies the Doehne Wildflower Meadow, named in honor of Harry and Elin Doehne. This diverse planting, roughly three-quarters of an acre, features a mixture of native Michigan grasses and wildflowers and is home to the Mark di Suvero sculpture Scarlatti.

The Doehne Wildflower Meadow, installed just over 20 years ago, is a primary feature of the Sculpture Park that opened in fall 2002. The original planting included several types of coneflowers, black-eyed Susan, spiderwort, coreopsis, white wild indigo, asters, butterfly weed, little bluestem, rattlesnake master, prairie dropseed, and other native grasses and broadleaf perennials. More than 35 unique plant varieties are observed in this diverse space, along with the abundant wildlife it supports—birds, caterpillars, butterflies, moths, bees, rabbits and more.

A carefully choreographed burn was conducted there in early spring 2022. Fire is an essential part of the meadow landscape and has become an important ecological tool for management. The controlled use of fire as a maintenance device has been utilized several times, with great benefit to the diversity and health of the plants in this space.

Fire can remove thatch—dead vegetation from previous years—exposing the soil beneath. Sunlight hitting that soil can increase microbial and root activity, making nutrients more available to plants and triggering seed germination in some species. Fire suppresses nonnative species while at the same time giving fire-adapted native species as much as four more weeks in the growing season. Plants beginning their seasonal growth spurt right after the fire benefit greatly, as it removes many of their competitors for light, nutrients and moisture. Soil is enriched by the burning vegetation, and these nutrients are then utilized for a new season’s growth.

Growth was also apparent in our annual horticulture exhibition themes. University of Michigan Health–West: Christmas & Holiday Traditions featured Sounds of the Season: Experience the season through a global soundtrack, while Fred & Dorothy Fichter Butterflies Are Blooming featured Flower Power: Experience the Power of Flowers. We wrapped up the year with Chrysanthemums & More! featuring Unexpected Color: The element of surprise created by fall plantings used in uncommon color combinations. Every year, the Meijer Gardens experience blossoms.
Education
Grow Your Curiosity!

Programs for Adults
In the 2022 fiscal year, adult learners at Meijer Gardens cultivated their curiosity and expanded their knowledge of gardens, sculpture, the natural environment, and the arts by engaging in a wide variety of workshops, lectures, and exhibition programs. Approximately 130 classes and workshops were offered—from charcoal drawing and fused glass to ikebana floral design and foraging. The popular new Open Studio Series provided a low-cost opportunity for participants to explore their artistic instincts and practice in a relaxed atmosphere of community art making.

We welcomed nationally recognized speakers for the annual Secchia Garden Lecture, a two-lecture series in April. Renowned ecologist Doug Tallamy’s galvanizing talk stressed the impact of home landscaping choices on the health of the natural world and shared his vision for a “Homegrown National Park” of living landscapes. Garden and landscape design expert Karen Bussolini delivered practical, hands-in-the-dirt tips for “naturescaping” a beautiful and sustainable yard.

Weekend plant shows drew thousands interested in appreciating the beauty and learning about the care of orchids, bonsai trees, dahlias, and more. Many shows incorporated demonstrations, films and workshops. The new seasonal Books in Bloom! initiative welcomed guests to the Peter M. Wege Library to enjoy a unique floral arrangement created by our talented Horticulture staff, inspired by a book in the library’s collection.

Drop-in programming for our three annual horticulture exhibitions and the first exhibition in the newly remodeled sculpture galleries were well attended. Learning opportunities including small lectures with local and regional experts and guided walks with Meijer Gardens staff.

Tea ceremonies in The Richard & Helen DeVos Japanese Garden teahouse and off-site bus trips—guest favorites that were on hiatus during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic—returned to the regular programming schedule in 2022.

Programs for Youth and Families
Youth & Family Programs staff focused on building a robust schedule of classes, scout events, and summer camps. Over 25 hands-on classes for children, child and adult pairs, and family groups were offered, ranging from breadmaking to family bonsai workshops to ice art. A 10-week season of 30 camp sessions—many brand new—for children ages 4–14 kept the Covenant Learning Center classrooms buzzing with activity. Programs in the Lena Meijer Children’s Garden and Michigan’s Farm Garden were extremely well attended by guests seeking opportunities for outdoor learning and exploration. Hallowee-Ones, Earth Day and weekly summer programs like Topiary Tales and Garden Helpers were Children’s Garden highlights, while the Farm Garden drew eager crowds for Springtime Walks, Fridays at the Farm, and special summer and fall family weekend events—including Focus on Flowers, Meet Me at the Fair, Heirloom Tomatoes, and Amazing Honeybees.

Several winter and early spring programs made their return as COVID-19 health and safety guidelines eased, including Cozy Tales for Chilly Days preschool story time, the annual Animal Adventures partner program with John Ball Zoo, and the perennially popular Butterfly Ballet partnership with the Grand Rapids Ballet School Junior Company. The summer Kids’ Tram tour was another family favorite.

Curiosity Courtyard: A Garden Discovery Experience in the David & Carol Van Andel Children’s Gallery—an energetic, colorful space inspired by Frances Hodgson Burnett’s classic book The Secret Garden—was popular for exploration and learning through play all year long.

Programs for Youth and Families
Programs for Schools
School programs rebounded impressively following two years of significantly affected attendance during the height of the pandemic. 25,000 students enjoyed a curiosity-sparking field trip supporting in-school learning. In January and February, 1,000 Grand Rapids Public Schools fourth graders participated in the annual Art and Science of Observation program—a joyful return to traditional on-site programming after a virtual 2021 program. School Programs staff members coordinated and led a Teacher Advisory Committee and teacher focus groups, collaborating with educators from numerous districts and fields to enhance and co-create programming to meet their students’ learning needs.

Establishment of the Amway-Meijer, Inc. Fund for Education was a major 2022 highlight. The endowed fund exceeded $300,000 in contributions and will forever support programming, admission, and transportation costs for underserved students in our community.

Hiring a School Programs Assistant in February returned the Education Department to pre-COVID staffing levels with 13 capable, passionate educators supported by the efforts and talents of many contract teachers and volunteers.
